Meet Astrid

Astrid R. Clements is a well-traveled, successful businesswoman who is passionate about helping people travel solo well, while never feeling like a tourist. Based in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, Astrid started traveling at age nine and hasn't stopped since. A transformative trip to Germany at age 18 did more than cement her love for exploring - Astrid saw first-hand how a solo trip can reveal the best parts of a person and challenge you to find the magic, one of a kind moments happening all around you.

Always up for a cultural adventure, Astrid has broken bread, shopped and laughed in more than 40 countries, on five continents, around the world from Morocco to China - and she's not done yet! She founded Astrid Solo Travel Advisor to give solo travelers a way to move through the world feeling confident, safe, inspired and engaged. Her exploits in the U.S. match the gusto from afar with visits to 37 states from Miami to Maine.

Why Solo Travel?

While some may balk at the idea of traveling alone, especially abroad, recent studies show that solo travel is on the rise. Also on the rise is the need for affordable luxury travel ideas for the solo traveller. A recent survey by Booking.com showed that 62% of American women have vacationed without a partner, and 72% say they have traveled alone for business or pleasure and are enthusiastic about the experience. That's why women business travelers look to Astrid Solo Travel Advisor for experienced planning that will turn routine business trips into exciting opportunities for cultural exposure.

AARP reports that over a third of adults 45+ report having taken solo trips in the last two years, and 81% of these adults are likely to take another solo trip in the next 12 months. This same study revealed that 79% of these solo travelers used online tools to book their trip, and 58% use online tools to plan their trip. Solo travelers looking for affordable luxury options are also comfortable spending an average of $500 - $1000 per day. A large majority of solo trips taken by this audience were to a domestic destination without a tour group.
